The project benefits more than 2 million people in Brazil. ISA CTEEP, a leader in Brazil's power transmission sector, has just energized the first large-scale battery energy storage project in the Brazilian transmission system. The batteries were installed in an area of approximately 5.000 m², which is the equivalent of half a soccer field.

ISA Cteep, a private-sector power transmission company, agreed to build the first large-scale energy storage project linked to Brazil's National Interconnected System (SIN).

Specifically for Brazil, as shown in the results, there is no resolution that specifically addresses energy storage, even though some regulations currently in force may indirectly influence the adoption of ESS technologies, such as regulations for electric vehicles, differentiated hourly tariffs, among others.

The absence of regulation relating to short-term intermittency management caused by renewable sources and the absence of specific compensation mechanisms relating to frequency regulation or back-up generation should be considered a priority in the process of developing an appropriate regulatory framework for energy storage. Another challenge ...

A full cell via pairing high-capacity silicon anode with high-voltage NMC cathode (Li(NiCoMn)O) holds great promise as a high-energy battery system for practical applications. Nevertheless, this potential has been hindered by challenges in terms of the pulverization of Si particles, unstable electrode/electrolyte interface, and severe dissolution of transition metals at high voltage.

The conditions are in place for the country's battery energy storage market to expand at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 20% to 30%, as Holu Solar's Sophia Costa explained.

Such challenges are minimized by the incorporation of utility-scale energy storage systems (ESS), providing flexibility and reliability to the electrical system. Despite the benefits brought by ESS, the technology still has limited investment and application in Brazil.
